From 3 R's to 5

Drawing from educational psychology and her own research, Dr. Price will show how to connect with Millennial learners through her system of the 5 R's. Courses should employ:

- Relevant learning for today's students
- Research-based approaches to instruction
- Rationales for course outcomes, policies and assessments
- Relaxed and participatory learning environments
- Relational opportunities and rapport with professors.

What You'll Learn

After this seminar, you'll be able to:

- Recognize characteristics of NextGen learners and how they affect learning
- Identify environments supporting effective teaching and learning for today's students
- Compare learning environments at your institution with what works for NextGen learners
- Examine your assignments and assessments in light of Millennial learners' preferences
- Assess your ability to connect with today's students.

Putting It Into Practice

You'll get materials to keep the momentum going after the seminar, including:

- Sample documents
- Self-assessment questions
- Rubrics
- Further discussion questions
- Blank worksheets
- Additional resources
- The Discussion Guide for Facilitators, given to all Magna online seminar participants to help you implement what you learn.

Who is Seminar for

This intermediate-level seminar is perfect for instructors and professors who want to reach out to Millennial learners. Student support services professionals and administrators can use this seminar to increase student engagement.

Now includes a Discussion Guide for Facilitators

Each seminar now includes a Discussion Guide for Facilitators. This guide provides step-by-step instructions for generating productive discussions and thoughtful reflection. You'll also get guidelines for continuing the conversation after the seminar, tailoring and implementing the strategies discussed, and creating a feedback loop for sharing best practices and challenges.
